GORDON PETERSON: Last Friday, the White House announced that it was restructuring government intelligence activities. CIA head, Richard Helms, received control of all intelligence. White House adviser, Henry Kissinger, was put at the head of a National Security Council Subcommittee to review intelligence operations.

Well today, Missouri Senator Stuart Symington called upon the Senate Armed Services Committee to investigate the move, and Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright charged that the reorganization was, his words--"A further erosion of Congressional control over the intelligence community."
